Non-invasive vascular studies are considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY if the ordering physician has reasonable expectation that their outcomes will potentially impact the clinical management of the patient.

Services are deemed MEDICALLY NECESSARY when the following conditions are met:

- Significant signs/symptoms of arterial or venous disease are present
- The information is necessary for appropriate medical and/or surgical management and/or
- The test is not redundant of other diagnostic procedures that must be performed.

Peripheral Arterial Examinations

MEDICALLY NECESSARY peripheral arterial study testing methods include duplex scans; Doppler waveform or spectral analysis; volume, impedance or strain gauge plethysmography; and transcutaneous oxygen tension measurement.

INVESTIGATIONAL peripheral arterial study testing methods include thermography, mechanical oscillometry, inductance or capacitance plethysmography, photoelectric plethysmography, differential plethysmography, and light reflective rheography.

Non-invasive peripheral arterial examinations, performed to establish the level and/or degree of arterial occlusive disease, are considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY if:

- Significant signs and/or symptoms of possible limb ischemia are present and
- The patient is a candidate for invasive/surgical therapeutic interventions.

Acute ischemia is characterized by the sudden onset of severe pain, coldness, numbness and pallor of the extremity. Chronic ischemia can be manifested by intermittent claudication, pain at rest, diminished pulse, ulceration, and gangrene.

A routine history and physical examination, which includes ankle/brachial indices (ABIs), can readily document the presence or absence of ischemic disease in the majority of cases. It is NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY to proceed beyond the physical examination for minor signs and symptoms such as hair loss, absence of a single pulse, relative coolness of a foot, shiny thin skin, or lack of toe nail growth unless related signs and/or symptoms are present which are severe enough to require possible invasive intervention.

An ABI is NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY as a procedure by itself; rather, ABI may be MEDICALLY NECESSARY when derived from a more comprehensive procedure which includes a permanent chart copy of the measured pressures and waveforms in the examined vessels. An ABI should be abnormal, e.g., <0.9 at rest, and must be accompanied by another appropriate indication before proceeding to more sophisticated or complete studies, except in patients with severe diabetes or uremia resulting in medial calcification as demonstrated by artifactually elevated ankle blood pressure.

Peripheral artery studies may be considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY if the following signs and symptoms are present:

- Claudication of such severity that it interferes significantly with the patient's occupation or lifestyle, or claudication with inability to stress the patient
- Rest pain (typically including the forefoot), usually associated with absent pulses, which becomes increasingly severe with elevation and diminishes with placement of the leg in a dependent position
- Tissue loss defined as gangrene or pre-gangrenous changes of the extremity, or ischemic ulceration of the extremity occurring in the absence of pulses
- Aneurysmal disease
- Evidence of thromboembolic events
- Blunt or penetrating trauma (including complications of diagnostic and/or therapeutic procedures) and/or
- Follow-up of grafts or other vascular intervention.

Pre-surgical conduit assessment of the upper extremity/radial artery(ies) may be performed prior to use in coronary artery bypass grafting (CABG) or as other arterial conduits.

Peripheral artery studies may be considered NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY if only the following signs and symptoms are present:

- Continuous burning of the feet (considered to be a neurologic symptom)
- Leg pain, nonspecific (729.5) and pain in limb (729.5) as single diagnoses are too general to warrant further investigation unless they can be related to other signs and symptoms
- Edema rarely occurs with arterial occlusive disease unless it is in the immediate postoperative period, in association with another inflammatory process or in association with rest pain and/or
- Absence of pulses in minor arteries, e.g., dorsalis pedis or posterior tibial, in the absence of symptoms. The absence of pulses is not an indication to proceed beyond the physical examination unless it is related to other signs and/or symptoms.

Duplex scanning and physiologic studies may be considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY during the same encounter if the physiologic studies are abnormal and/or to evaluate vascular trauma, thromboembolic events or aneurysmal disease, if the physician/provider can document medical necessity in the patient's medical record.

In general, non-invasive studies of the arterial system are to be utilized when invasive correction is contemplated or severity of findings dictate non-invasive study follow-up, but not for following non-invasive medical treatment regimens. The latter may be followed with physical findings and/or progression or relief of signs and/or symptoms. Screening of the asymptomatic patient is INVESTIGATIONAL.

Peripheral Venous Examinations

Indications for venous examinations are separated into three major categories: deep vein thrombosis (DVT), chronic venous insufficiency, and vein mapping. Studies are MEDICALLY NECESSARY only if the patient is a candidate for anticoagulation, thrombolysis or invasive therapeutic procedure(s).

Since the signs and symptoms of arterial occlusive disease and venous disease are so divergent, the performance of simultaneous arterial and venous studies during the same encounter should be rare. Consequently, documentation clearly supporting the medical necessity of both procedures performed during the same encounter must be available in the patient's medical record.

Deep Vein Thrombosis (DVT)

The signs and/or symptoms of DVT are relatively non-specific; and due to the risk associated with pulmonary embolism (PE), objective testing is considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY in patients who are candidates for anticoagulation or invasive therapeutic procedures for the following:

- Clinical signs and/or symptoms of DVT including, but not limited to, edema, tenderness, inflammation, and/or erythema
- Clinical signs and/or symptoms of pulmonary embolus (PE) including, but not limited to, hemoptysis, chest pain, and/or dyspnea
- Unexplained lower extremity edema status, post major surgical procedures, trauma, other or progressive illness/condition and/or
- Unexplained lower extremity pain, excluding pain of skeletal origin.

These studies are rarely considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY for the following:

- Bilateral limb edema in the presence of signs and/or symptoms of congestive heart failure, exogenous obesity and/or arthritis and/or
- Follow-up of phlebitis unless signs/symptoms suggest possible extension of thrombus.

Chronic Venous Insufficiency

Chronic venous insufficiency may be divided into three categories: primary varicose veins, recurrent DVT, and post-thrombotic (post-phlebitic) syndrome.

Peripheral venous studies may be MEDICALLY NECESSARY for the evaluation of:

- Venous function in patients with ulceration suspected to be secondary to venous insufficiency when documenting venous valvular incompetence prior to invasive therapeutic intervention
- Varicose veins by themselves do not indicate medical necessity, but medical necessity may be indicated when they are accompanied by significant pain or stasis dermatitis and/or
- Superficial thrombophlebitis involving the proximal thigh (to investigate whether there was thrombus at the saphenofemoral junction that would demand either anticoagulation or surgical ligation).

Vein Mapping

Mapping the saphenous veins prior to scheduled revascularization procedures is considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY when it is expected that an autologous vein will be used, but only if there is uncertainty regarding the availability of a suitable vein for by-pass.

Vein mapping is not always necessary as a routine pre-operative study but is MEDICALLY NECESSARY when the patient's clinical evaluation indicates one of the following:

- Previous partial harvest of the vein
- Previous thrombophlebitis or DVT in the leg
- Severe varicose veins
- Previous history of vein stripping, ligation, or sclerotherapy
- Obesity to the degree it interferes with clinical determination
- Other examples must clearly be supported by the medical documentation.

Vein mapping may be performed prior to creating a dialysis fistula. Please see Vessel Mapping of Vessels for Hemodialysis Access below.

Visceral Vascular Studies

This procedure is MEDICALLY NECESSARY in the evaluation and/or management of vascular disease involving vessels of the abdominal, pelvic, scrotal contents, and/or retroperitoneal organs.

Duplex scanning in the evaluation of an abdominal aortic aneurysm is NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY unless there is a pulsatile abdominal mass and signs and symptoms of peripheral vascular disease are present.

Follow-up of an abdominal aneurysm on a periodic basis using abdominal ultrasound rather than visceral vascular studies to determine growth and potential need for intervention is MEDICALLY NECESSARY.

Vascular studies are not the initial diagnostic modality for the evaluation of abdominal pain/tenderness. There must be a high index of suspicion that the pain is caused by a vascular disorder, such as mesentery ischemia.

Noninvasive vascular studies are MEDICALLY NECESSARY only if the outcome will potentially impact the clinical course of the patient. For example, if a patient is going to proceed on to other diagnostic and/or therapeutic procedures regardless of the outcome of noninvasive studies, noninvasive vascular procedures are usually NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY. That is, if it is obvious from the findings of the history and physical examination that the patient is going to proceed to angiography, then noninvasive vascular studies may not be medically necessary.

Hemodialysis Access Examination

Doppler flow study is considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY when the dialysis access site manifests signs or symptoms associated with vascular compromise, and when the results of this test are necessary to determine the clinical course of treatment.

Signs or symptoms in patients with ESRD of impending failure of the hemodialysis access site, including:

- Elevated venous pressure > 200mm Hg on a 200 cc/min. pump
- Elevated recirculation of time of 12% or greater, and
- Low urea reduction rate < 60%
- An access with a palpable "water hammer" pulse on examination (which implies venous outflow obstruction).

Vessel Mapping of Vessels for Hemodialysis Access

Vessel mapping of vessels for hemodialysis access is considered MEDICALLY NECESSARY when it is performed preoperatively prior to creation of hemodialysis access using an autogenous hemodialysis conduit, including arterial inflow and venous outflow.

An example of a clinical situation demonstrating the need for both studies would be a scenario where a Doppler flow study demonstrates reduced flow (blood flow rate less than 800 cc/min or a decreased flow of 25% or greater from previous study), and the physician requires an arteriogram, to define the extent of the problem. The patient's medical record(s) must provide documentation supporting the need for more than one imaging study.

If the service is done for monitoring purposes, it is NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY.

Description

Non-invasive vascular studies utilize ultrasonic Doppler and physiologic principles to assess irregularities in blood flow in arterial and venous systems. The display may be a two-dimensional image with spectral analysis and color flow or a plethysmographic recording. For the purposes of this policy, non-invasive vascular studies include duplex scans, physiologic studies and plethysmography.

Duplex scan: An ultrasonic scanning procedure with display of both two-dimensional structure and motion with time and Doppler ultrasonic signal documentation with spectrum analysis and/or color flow velocity mapping or imaging.

Physiologic studies: Functional measurement procedures that include Doppler ultrasound studies, blood pressure measurements, transcutaneous oxygen tension measurement, or plethysmography.

Plethysmography: Plethysmography involves the measurement and recording (by one of several methods) of changes in the size of a body part as modified by the circulation of blood in that part. Plethysmography is of value as a noninvasive technique for diagnostic, preoperative and postoperative evaluation of peripheral artery disease in the internal medicine or vascular surgery practice. It is also a useful tool for the preoperative podiatric evaluation of the diabetic patient or one who has intermittent claudication or other signs or symptoms indicative of peripheral vascular disease which have a bearing on the patient's candidacy for foot surgery.
